Replacement Abstract:

A page is composed by establishing an arrangement of objects to be fitted on to the page and then carrying out an iterative process to minimise a cost function dependent on properties of the arrangement. Computational advantages are obtained by describing such arrangements as slicing structures.

3